

Ansel Adams Garage Sale Find

Contributed by Chet Douglas
Tuesday, 27 July 2010
Last Updated Tuesday, 27 July 2010

"Mr. Norsigian has been claiming these negatives were made by Ansel Adams for many years," Matthew Adams told the L.A. Daily News in 2009. "I am unaware of anyone knowledgeable agreeing with him."

From the "I'm a blind fool" department.

Artist Rick Norsigian sat on a box of Ansel Adams glass negatives for 10 years before making the connection that these may be pictures that Ansel Adams took early in his career. Historians thought they were destroyed in a darkroom fire but they turned up at a garage sale in California.

Way to go Rick.

You're a Tack.

Super Sharp.

You're also going to be an estimated 200 million dollars richer so that make me hate you for being stupid and lucky.

I'm with Ansel Adams Grandson who thinks this dude is a scammer - in his words:

"Mr. Norsigian has been claiming these negatives were made by Ansel Adams for many years," Matthew Adams told the L.A. Daily News in 2009. "I am unaware of anyone knowledgeable agreeing with him."